Intertextuality As a Tool To Identify Early Malay Cult Films

By
*Mohd Rasyidi Bin Talib, *Nur Afifah Vanitha Binti Abdullah, Ph.D & *Candida Jau Emang

*Faculty of Applied and Creative Arts, University Malaysia Sarawak,
94300 Kota Samarahan,
Sarawak
Tel: +60138085171/+6082581334/581337
Fax: +6082581340
siditalib@gmail.com anafifah@faca.unimas.my jecandida@faca.unimas.my

Introduction

This paper aims to discuss intertextuality theory as a conceptual framework to analyze Mat Raship’s films as the earliest Malay cult film in Malaysian cinema. Janconvish stated cult film as a certain type of film driven out from the mainstream cinema\(^1\). A film gains it status as cult film from their fans, an active celebration\(^2\). The first zombie film directed by George A. Romero in 1968 entitled The Night of the Living Dead is the best example on defining the cult fans and the celebration\(^3\). Before the film screening, Romero “was asked about the ideological implications of his work” but somehow, he was asked by the audiences to stop the discussion and leave the stage so that they can enjoy ‘good parts’ of the film\(^4\).

\(^4\) Ibid.