

Development of an energy management strategy for optimal operation of Micro-Grids with PV-Battery/wind technologies based on residential energy storage system

Abstract

This project studies the impact of different energy source technologies on storage in micro-grids. As these kinds of systems are becoming increasingly popular in the residential sector, the development of a new generation of equipment, such as more efficient batteries or solar panels, makes further study necessary.

